

Unusual autotransplantations and their complications

doc. Martin Starosta, M.D., Ph.D.

Autotransplantation of teeth is a common part of tooth replacement therapy in indicated cases. If we decide to do it, we must consider all the advantages and disadvantages of this type of treatment. However, not everything is always ideal. In some cases, we encounter situations where the use of autotransplantation of teeth is questionable. Individual case studies will be used to share our own experience of successes and complications in practice.
